Composer Bio:

JIRÍ LABURDA

bn April 3, 1931

Jiří Laburda, (pronounced YIH-zhee) composer from the Czech Republic, has acquired his love for music from his parents and received elementary musical training in his native town of Soběslav. His attitude to music in general, and composition, in particular, was also shaped by the Czech composers Karel Hába, Zdeněk Hůla and the musicologist, Eduard Herzog.

Between 1952 and 1955, Laburda studied at the Pedagogical Faculty of Prague's Charles University and later on at the Prague Teacher Training College (1957-1960). In 1970, he received the title of Doctor of Philosophy; his doctoral thesis was entitled The Symphonies of D. D. Schostakovitch. His treatise, Didactic Problems of Modern Textbooks of Harmony, completed in 1973, is now part of his university textbook, Diatonic Harmony.

Jiří Laburda taught at various teacher-training colleges and institutions in Czech towns until he joined the staff of the Pedagogical Faculty of Charles University in Prague. He is presently on the faculty at the Conservatory of Music in Prague.

In his early days as a composer, Jiří Laburda devoted himself mostly to choral compositions which still assume a pride of place among his works. In composition, he draws on traditional means of expression. Stylistically, he ties on to neo-classicism in particular. As far as modern techniques of composition are concerned, it is small aleatoric and dodecaphony which are closest to his temperament.

Over the years, Laburda has composed an impressive number of works out of which more than 150 compositions have appeared in print. Laburda's compositions are understandable and are very well received by the broadest sector of music lovers. He has always maintained lively contacts with musicians and amateur choirs for which he has composed very comprehensible works. To date, he has produced many compositions for children, notably minor works which children can easily play or sing. Among his technically demanding compositions are the virtuoso 1st and 2nd Partita for Solo Violin, numerous Sonatas (8 for piano, 4 for organ, 2 for trombone, oboe, clarinet, trumpet, tuba, accordion), Concertos (piano, organ, bassoon, accordion), Double Concerto for Violin and Cello, 8 Masses, Cantatas, Symphony, etc.

That Jiří Laburda's compositions are generally acclaimed and successful is corroborated by the countless prizes and distinctions which have been awarded thus far at domestic and international musical competitions. As far as domestic events go, in the jubilee competition sponsored by Czechoslovak Radio Prague, he won the prize for his Piano Concerto, while carrying away several prizes from the nationwide choral competition at Jihlava.

At international music festivals and similar events, he was awarded the Oscar Esplá prize for his cantata-missa, Glagolitica (1966); he won the Otto Sprechelsen prize in the city of Hanover, Germany, for his cantata, Metamorphoses (1968); in 1974, his Prelude for Solo Accordion received the SACEM-UPAC prize in Paris. Prizes in international competitions were received also in 1987, 1994 and 1996 for other music compositions.

Green Marjoram for Mixed Choir received the prize —Premio Città di Trento—in 1986 and also the first prize in the 1986 International Choral Competition, Trento, Italy. It was premiered by L'ensemble Vocal a cappella de Lyon, France, under the direction of Marcel Corneloup, on October 3, 1987 in Trento, Italy.
